School board looks to the future

Discussions center on communications, planning, funding

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T News Editor

Interim Superintendent Randall Christopher invited members of the school district's new Communications Task Force to report on their goals and progress during Thursday night's board meeting.

He said he hopes to convey that the district "cares and loves our students, while attempting to be prudent with resources, to use every opportunity to do our best, and to be as transparent as we can."

Some recent steps to improve communications within the district include plans to highlight faculty, student and staff involvement.

Faculty and staff continue to work on better ways of communicating with parents. Sara Stringfield, Family Resource Coordinator at West Irvine, said she scans all documents that are sent home in Thursday folders and sends them out via email to those who sign up to receive them.

"We've had a wonderful response to that," she said.

The task force recognizes that good communications are two-way. Jeremy Simpson, a teacher at the high school, said they must provide parents with a way to connect with the right people when they have a question or concern.

Jenkins Twins, Tony Toy, rock debut concert

CVT Staff report

Trevor and Trenton Jenkins, also known as the musical act "The Jenkins Twins," brought out fans of all ages to the auditorium at the Estill County High School on Saturday night.

An estimated 130 people attended the show, which began at 7 p.m. with Tony Toy opening for The Jenkins Twins with the song "Listen to the Music."

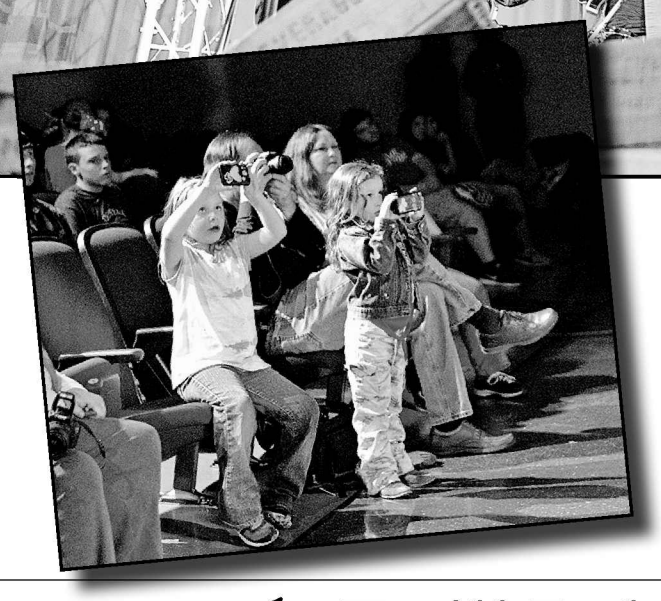

The show promoted the release of The Jenkins Twins debut CD, which they have dubbed "Jellico." Aaron Floyd played the drums, Trenton Jenkins played the banjo, Trevor Jenkins was featured on guitar, while the Jenkins twins' father Wesley Jenkins played bass.

The Jenkins signed with Kindred Records for their Jellico album. Scotty Roberts, the founder of Kindred Records, distributes their album and promotes their songs through iTunes, Spotify, Amazon and YouTube.

The twins, who have recently had local gigs with decent turnouts, said, "We thought we'd go all out for our Jellico album release

Two men arrested for stealing TV

Two Cantrill Street men have been arrested and charged with complicity to commit burglary, second degree.

Brandon Stamper, 33, of 533 Cantrill Street, and Jeremiah K. Johnson, 27, of 536 Cantrill Street, were arrested after Stamper allegedly broke into 223 High Street and took a 55-inch television valued at more than $500. When police interviewed Stamper, he requested an attorney, which terminated the interview. The burglary was said to have taken place on March 19 2015.

Jeremiah Johnson was charged with complicity to burglary, second degree. After he was mirandized, he stated he was also involved with breaking into 223 High Street and taking the television. Johnson then allegedly took the TV to Dollar Deals and sold it

"Relationships are built on effective communications," Teresa Dawes, Director of Community Education added. Dawes co-facilitates the task force.

She said there have been offers from community partners to provide customer service training to the "front line people," or the ones who work in school offices.

In other business, board chair Robbie Starling said the next step in the search for a new school superintendent is meeting with the screening committee, who will then begin sifting through applications and choose top applicants for the board to review. The board may request other applications. The next superintendent is expected to be hired by June 1.

The District Facility Plan, a four-year plan put together by a local planning committee, was approved on Thursday night. The plan lists by priority unmet district facility needs.

The DFP requires that a public hearing officer be appointed to officiate over a required public hearing for the plan.

Christopher recommended Roland Meuller to serve as the public hearing officer.

The hearing is scheduled before the next school board meeting, which will be at South Irvine Elementary in April. The public hearing begins at 5:30 p.m., while the regular school board meeting will begin at 6 p.m.

High on the list of priorities for new construction include a new vocational school facility and an early childhood center at the South Irvine site.

In discussing the DFP, Christopher said the question is sometimes raised as to how the district can afford renovations and new buildings. He explained that funds for building come from restricted funds from which the district receives their bonding capabilities.

These funds include dollars collected locally via the school tax, but a large part of the funds come from the state.

One of those sources is capital outlay funds, which are based on the current average daily attendance (ADA). That number (typical ADA is 2,200, but actual student enrollment is 2,390) is multiplied by $100 per child; however, $20 of that is escrowed into a separate account by the state. The county school district can access $80 per child, which amounts to about $175,000 that can be directed toward building projects.

A second source is the Facility Support Program of Kentucky, which is funded by the "local nickle," or the five cents of school tax that is paid on every $100 of property value. (The remainder of the school tax goes to the school's general fund, which pays salaries, etc.)

A third source for building funds is the "equalization" FSPK, which the state matches based on the district's growth and the local poverty level. These funds are about $575,000.

From these three sources-the capital outlay fund of $175,000 per year, the approximate $250,000 from local input to FSPK, and $575,000 from equalization funds to FSPK—the bonding capacity is about $996,000 per year. Nothing but approved building projects can be paid for with these restricted funds.

Sometimes money becomes available from other funds. An example is when the school district received two offers of assistance totaling $67,000 that can be used toward bonding.

These offers of assistance come from the state fund into which the general assembly allots $100,000,000 every two years for district facility plans throughout Kentucky.

Christopher said the district is already obligated for about the next 15 years for recent building projects, including the new West Irvine Elementary and high school and middle school renovations.

However, when creating the new district facility plan, ambitious plans must be included in the four year plan to begin with, because they cannot be added later.

Some consent items on the agenda: The board approved paying a fee of $248 to the Kentucky School Board's Kentucky Utilities Rate Case intervention fund. KSBA is fighting on behalf of school districts for lower utility rates for schools and sports fields. Payment to the intervention fund was determined to be considerably cheaper than paying the proposed rate increase.

The board was notified of personnel actions including the hiring of Michele Paige as a counselor at the middle school and Jodi Dawes as a substitute teacher. Resignations came from Curt Neal, custodian at the middle school, Karen Puckett, district occupational therapist, and Tim Tipton, head boys' soccer coach at the high school.

An amendment to the Professional Services Agreement for the High School Partial Renovation was approved. The amendment authorized RossTarrant Architects to proceed with the bleacher project.

Besides the bleachers, the mezzanine areas will be renovated also. New railings will be added, as well as a new scoreboard. Curtains will be installed in the mezzanine areas so the space can be partitioned for multiple activities.

An alternate plan was included so that additional heating can be added to the foyer of the gym if funds allow.

Sealed bids for the project will be opened on May 6, and the project is set to begin on June 1.

A request for a medical leave of absence was approved.

An out of state trip for 30 students in the high school's JROTC program to participate in the Eastern Tennessee JROTC Raider Conference was approved. JROTC raised funds for the trip, but asked for the board to pay for lodging.

A field trip was approved for three West Irvine Elementary classes to travel to the Cincinnati Zoo for an overnight nocturnal adventures program.

The next regularly scheduled school board meeting is April 16 at 6 p.m. at the South Irvine Pre-K Center. The District Facility Plan public hearing precedes the meeting and begins at 5:30 p.m.

November before the release.

"We put a lot of hard work into it, getting it all together. We were very pleased with the outcome, and want to think all of our supporters, friends and family for coming out and supporting what we love to do," said Trenton.

"I love how intimate the show was in front of our hometown supporters. Everyone was tuned in and listening to every word we sang. It doesn't get much better than that. We are very appreciative of everyone who gives us a chance and listens to us," said Trevor.

Trenton, who is three minutes older than Trevor, was pretty excited about the fact that more than 100 people came out just to see them play.

"A few months ago we would have never thought we could get 10 people out to watch us," he said.

"So it was a very surreal moment, looking into the huge party and try to legitimize this event."

They have been planning and organizing since the crowd of our hometown supporters. We are thankful for everyone who came out."

As for their opening act? Tony Toy is a mutual friend through the twins' cousin Jerran Webster (who hosted the night). They met a few months before the release and knew they wanted to incorporate his talent into their show.

"People were asking me after the show if he had an album, so I think that's a really good sign," said Trevor. "We are happy to help him get his name out in our hometown, because he would do the same for us. Everyone was extremely pleased with his performance, and man, can the guy shred a guitar!"

The Jenkins Twins also want to thank Deb Anders and the FCCLA club for sponsoring the album release event. They pre-sold tickets and will receive a percentage of the funds for their organization.

The twins received the rest of the money and will be saving it back for upcoming shows and their next album.

The Jenkins Twins next local performance will be at the Mountain Mushroom Festival on April 26.

several others. At least twelve volunteers were on hand to help the little ones with different activities.

Three of those volunteers included Annie Turner, the snow princess, and Ashley Marsh, who played the younger sister. Becca Hughes also helped, and was dressed as Belle from Beauty and the Beast.

Turner and Marsh sang songs with the children and posed for pictures throughout the event. It was estimated that 75 or more children attended and Relay for Life raised $360.

Some of the different activities provided for the children included coloring, games such as pin the nose on the snowman and ball toss, pipe cleaner crafts, painting nails, and face painting. They were also snacks provided for the kids.

Police Beats

Irvine Police Department

3-14 Charles Leon Worley, of 1025 Quincy Court, Berea, was arrested after police received several complaints that his vehicle was pulled over at the storage units on Bertha Wallace Drive. Worley was reportedly seen vomiting and urinating beside the door of his truck. He was found to be showing multiple signs of intoxication and could not pass field sobriety tests. Officer Karl Rifenbark made the arrest.

3-16 Tara Morgan Coffey, 18, of 179 Glory Street, was arrested after she was seen failing to stop at the four-way intersection at Rice and Main Streets. Officer Michael Gross said he smelled marijuana as he approached the vehicle. He requested the services of the local K-9 unit, who then alerted police to three cigarette packs with parts of marijuana cigarettes inside them, an open vodka bottle, and a marijuana pipe. When Coffey was searched, a needle and a baggie of marijuana were found on her person. Later, she was searched at jail and reportedly had two gabapentin on her. She was released on March 18, on $2,500 cash bond.

3-19 James Lee Hammons, 42, of 7230 Winchester Rd., was arrested at Marcum and Wallace Memorial Hospital after the Irvine Police Department received a 911 call from MWMH about an unruly patient. When police arrived there, a security guard had Hammon's arms behind his back, because he had allegedly attempted to hit staff members with his fist. Hammons showed multiple signs of intoxication and told police he had been drinking. He blew a .202 on a breathalyzer test. IPD Officer Sam Hensley made the arrest.

3-21 Steven E. Officer, 42, of 135 Hall/Abney Cemetery Road, was served two bench warrants from Estill County District Court for failure to pay fines and restitution.

Sheriff's Department

3-15 Kevin Buttler, 34, of 2600 Stacy Lane, Apt. #123, was arrested by Deputy Randy Farthing after the manager of the Dollar General, or a witness, said that Buttler ate a Little Debbie cake and attempted to leave the store without paying for it.

3-20 Steven Neal II, 27, of 55 North Winn Street, was seen standing beside the roadway. He was said to be yelling, causing a disturbance, and making threatening gestures. When Deputy Farthing attempted to arrest him, he resisted arrest, according to the police report, and was taken to the ground by a deputy and two state troopers.

He smelled of alcohol and blew .16 on the breathalyzer test.

Two arrested at Estill Springs

Two men were arrested at Estill Springs, after a K-9 alerted on the vehicle in which they were seated.

Joshua Woosley, 23, of 604 Cantrill, was arrested after a search of his vehicle led to a finding a cigarette pack with part of a marijuana joint stored inside it. Jacob L. Henry, 20, of 706 Main Street, Apartment #4, was arrested and charged with possession of marijuana and drug paraphernalia. He was a passenger in the car alerted on by the IPD K-9 unit. According to the police report, Henry took responsibility for the marijuana pipe and marijuana cigarettes in his vehicle and stated that they were his. Sergeant Michael Gross made the arrests.

Kentucky State Police

3-12 Jason W. McIntosh, 39, of 5577 Hwy. 399, Lee County, was arrested on a warrant for allegedly attempting to cash a check stolen in a burglary in Clark County. According to a police report, the defendant presented the check to BB&T bank and attempted to cash it for $3,500. The report also stated that he presented his license as proof of identification and signed his own name in the endorsement section on the back of the check. The incident was captured on bank surveillance. When the victim was contacted, he/she stated that he/she did not fill out the check in question. McIntosh was charged with criminal possession of a forged instrument, second, degree. He was released on March 18 on a $9,000 surety bond.

Man attempts to hide pills

An Irvine man was arrested after Kentucky State Police arrived at his home at 41 Sand Hill Church Road to retrieve some belongings for a female that lives at another residence.

James Oakley Allen, 26, opened the door and saw the trooper standing there, according to the police report, and maneuvered his body in an attempt to hide something. When Trooper Robinson pushed open the door and asked why he was hiding behind the door, Mr. Allen stated that he could search that area all he wanted, and he was not hiding anything.

Robinson then located a blue vial containing two blue oval pills and two halves of the same pill.

Allen confessed that the vial belonged to him and stated that the blue pills were percocet 30 mg. He asked to be taken to jail. Allen was then arrested and transported to the jail without incident.

He was charged with possession of a controlled substance, first degree, first offense.

Allen was released on a $5,000 surety bond on March 20, 2015.

KSP called to aid of local police

Kentucky State Police helped arrest a man at 141 Plum Street, Irvine, after a call came that he was showing signs of being severely intoxicated.

On March 15, Steven Wells, 36, was arrested after resisting arrest and becoming violent toward officers.

Trooper Zach Pennington deployed his taser against Wells, who then became compliant.

Wells was charged with alcohol intoxication in a public place, first and second offense; menacing; disorderly conduct, second degree; resisting arrest; terroristic threatening, third degree; and assault, third degree, of a police officer. He was released on a $5,000 cash bond on March 15, 2015.

Color Guard performs 'In a Gentle Rain'

by Marla Marrs

On Saturday, the Winter Color Guard practiced all day before an informal dress rehearsal performance that night at Estill Spring's gym. The event was held in conjunction with the spaghetti supper happening in the cafeteria.

The Winter Color Guard will be heading to Union, Kentucky, on Saturday, March 28, to perform at 10 a.m. at Ryle High School for the TMA 2015 Championship. The Color Guard is classified as Scholastic A-3, and they will be competing against eighteen other groups.

The title of their show is The Storm, and they will be performing to the song "In a Gentle Rain" by Robert W. Smith and Lux Aeterna by Clint Mansell. Due to the weather, the Winter Color Guard has missed three competitions. At the three they did attend though, they placed first once, and fifth place twice.

The Winter Color Guard is coached by Jamie Hill and Justin Clark.

Earth can't afford to keep supporting our consumerist society as it now exists, Prince Charles tells Louisville audience

Previously published in Kentucky Health News

This is the transcript of The Prince of Wales's speech at the Cathedral of the Assumption, Louisville, following an introduction by Wendell Berry (subheads added)

Ladies and gentlemen, it has been an immense pleasure to spend our last day in the United States here in Louisville, guided by a very special lady. Christy Brown, if I may say so, is one of the most remarkable people I have come across; a true force of nature, with an unbounded enthusiasm to bring people together across a whole range of important issues, and with the determined tenacity to make things happen. I know from my own experience, it is very hard to say "no" to Christy Brown! It was she who asked me to articulate the principles of harmony which I have long believed to lie at the heart of how we respond to the immense challenges and dangers facing humanity. So I can only hope you are all prepared to put up with such articulation.

I must say, it is also very special to have been introduced by such a great advocate of harmony, Wendell Berry, who I am incredibly touched said those wonderful words about me. He is a very special son of Kentucky. I only wish I had time to visit his farm. I will now embarrass him by telling you that he has long been a hero of mine. I remember him once describing his farm here in Kentucky. Half of it, he said, sits at the top of a hill and the other half at the bottom, which, as he put it, "is what you call a learning situation…"

Now, to return to Christy's request: In the 1960's, as I remember so well, a frenzy of change swept the world in the wave of post-war "Modernism." There was an eagerness to embark upon a new age of radical experimentation in every area of human experience which caused many traditional ideas to be discarded in a fit of uncontrollable enthusiasm – ideas that will always be of timeless value for every generation confronting the actual realities of life on this Earth. I remember it only too well – and even as a teenager I felt deeply about what seemed to me a dangerously short-sighted approach, whether in terms of the built or natural environment, agriculture, healthcare or education. In all cases we were losing something of vital importance – we were disconnecting ourselves from the wealth of traditional knowledge that had guided countless generations to understand the significance of Nature's processes and cyclical economy. It always seemed to me that in this period of change some subtle balance was being tragically lost, without which we would find ourselves in an increasingly difficult and exposed position. As, indeed, we have.

I have been trying to point out ever since where I feel the balance needs righting and where some of the discarded, but timeless principles of operating need to be reintroduced in order to create a more integrated approach. It has turned out to be a peculiarly hazardous pastime. But I have come to the inescapable conclusion that the legacy of Modernism in our so-called post-Modern age has brought us to a crucial moment in history; prompting a lot of uncomfortable questions.

The first question I want to ask is how we have landed ourselves and the rest of the world in the mess that it now struggles to overcome? We have more than enough scientific evidence that proves this to be so. But what is it that drives us on to exacerbate the problems? Why do we tip the balance of the Earth's delicate systems with yet more destruction, even though we know in our heart of hearts that in doing so we will most likely risk bringing everything down around us? In the thirty years or so that I have been attempting to understand and address the many related problems, I have tried to ask myself what it is in our general attitude to the world that is ultimately at fault? In doing so, of course, it must have appeared as though I was just flitting from one subject to another – from agriculture to architecture, from education to healthcare – but I was merely trying to point out where the imbalance was most acute; where the essential unity of things, as reflected in nature, was being dangerously fragmented and deconstructed.

The harmonious system of nature is collapsing

The question that should surely keep us all awake at nights is what happens if you go on deconstructing? I fear the answer is all too plain. We summon up more and more chaos. I have also spent a long time wondering that if we could identify the key fault, would it be possible to fix it? And if we could, what would that "fix" amount to in practical as well as philosophical terms? What worries me is that at the moment there is not a lot of attention given to the way we perceive the world. We take our mechanistic view of it for granted and believe that the language of scientific empiricism which so dominates our discussion is the only form of language we need to guide us. So let's be clear – whereas the empirical view of the world makes observational deductions about the laws of nature, the philosophical deals with the meaning of things; and the religious concerns itself with the sacred presence in things. They each have a role to play.

The way in which empirical enquiry has developed to this position of dominance since the Enlightenment has certainly enabled us to improve the material realm of the human condition. But let us also recognize that this progress was only possible because of an earlier and crucial shift which took us away from a traditional sense of participation in nature to the claim of mastery and exploitation over the natural order that has reaped such a troubling and bitter harvest. That earlier shift, away from seeing ourselves within nature to us standing apart from it, gradually undermined what I have always felt, deep down, to be the true situation – that if we wish to maintain our civilizations, then we must look after the Earth and actively maintain its many intricate states of balance so that it achieves the necessary, active state of harmony which is the prerequisite for the health of everything in creation. In other words, that which sustains us must also itself be sustained.

But we are not keeping to our side of the bargain and, consequently, the sustainability of the entire harmonious system is collapsing – in failing the Earth we are failing humanity. We are standing at a moment of substantial transition where we face the dual challenges of a world view and an economic system that seem to have enormous shortcomings, together with an environmental crisis – including that of climate change – which threatens to engulf us all.

Of course, we have achieved extraordinary prosperity since the advent of the Industrial Revolution. People live longer, have access to universal education, better healthcare and the promise of pensions. We also have more leisure time; opportunities to travel – the list is endless. But on the debit side, we in the industrialized world have increased our consumption of the Earth's resources in the last thirty years to such an extent that, as a result, our collective demands on nature's capacity for renewal are being exceeded annually by some 25 per cent.

Back in the 1950's and right up to the 1990's it seemed credible to argue that the human will was the master of creation; that the only acceptable way of thinking was a mechanistic way of thinking; that the Earth's natural resources were just that – resources – to be plundered because they were there for our use, without limit. But for all its achievements, our consumerist society comes at an enormous cost to the Earth and we must face up to the fact that the Earth cannot afford to support it.

Just as our banking sector has been struggling with its debts – and paradoxically also facing calls for a return to so-called "old-fashioned," traditional banking – so nature's life-support systems are failing to cope with the debts we have built up there too. If we don't face up to this, then nature, the biggest bank of all, could go bust. And no amount of quantitative easing will revive it. It seems to me a self-evident truth that we cannot have any form of capitalism without capital. But we must remember that the ultimate source of all economic capital is nature's capital. Our ability to adapt to the effects of climate change, and then perhaps even to reduce those effects, depends upon us adapting our pursuit of "unlimited" economic growth to that of "sustainable" economic growth. And that depends upon basing our approach on the fundamental resilience of our ecosystems. Ecosystem resilience leads to economic resilience. If we carry on destroying our marine and forest ecosystems as we are doing, then we will rob them of their natural resilience and so end up destroying our own.

We are not separate from nature

No matter how sophisticated our technology has become, the simple fact is that we are not separate from nature – like everything else, we are nature. The more you understand this fact the more you see how our mechanistic way of thinking causes such confusion. Modern agri-industry, for instance, may have made enormous strides to feed the burgeoning world's population, but at a huge and unsustainable cost to ecosystems, through massive use of artificial fertilizers, herbicides, pesticides and water. It is a reductive approach to one issue that is patently not durable because it sustains nothing but its own decline, solving one problem by creating countless others.

This, of course, is not the way nature operates. In nature the entire system is a complex unfolding of inter-dependent, multi-faceted relationships and to understand them, we have to use "joined-up" thinking. The ancient Greek word for the process of joining things up was "harmonia." So, "joined-up thinking" seeks to create harmony, which is a very specific state of affairs. In fact, it is the very prerequisite of health and well-being. Our bodies have to be in harmony if they are to be healthy, just as an entire ecosystem has to be. This is the way nature operates. Natural sciences like microbiology and botany tell us very clearly that every kind of organism, be it big or microscopic, is a complex system of interrelated and interdependent parts – which makes each organism a microcosm of its local environment; the very essence of it, in fact. The sum of these parts builds and maintains a coherence – an active, harmonic unity – with no waste. No one part operates either in isolation or beyond the limits set by the whole.

Facing the future, therefore, requires a shift from a reductive, mechanistic approach to one that is more balanced and integrated with nature's complexity – one that recognizes not just the build-up of financial capital, but the equal importance of what we already have – environmental capital and, crucially, what I might best call "community capital." That is, the networks of people and organizations, the post offices and bars, the churches and community halls, the mosques, temples and bazaars – the wealth that holds our communities together; that enriches people's lives through mutual support, love, loyalty and identity.

Just as we have no way of accounting for the loss of the natural world, contemporary economics has no way of accounting for the loss of this community capital. This is why we need to ask ourselves whether the present form of globalization is entirely appropriate, given the circumstances confronting us. There are, clearly, benefits, but we need to ask whether it requires adaptation so that it also enables, as it were, globalization from the bottom up. This, after all, is the way nature operates! At the moment we operate under a form of globalization that tends to render down all the rich diversity of a culture into a uniform, homogenized mono-culture. This is where the Modernist paradigm needs to be called into question before the damage being done is irretrievable. …

One of the chief architects of our present economic model was Adam Smith. Interestingly, he was another who recognized that, although individual freedom is rooted in our impulse for self-reliance, it must be balanced by the limits imposed by natural law. As he prepared his book, The Theory of Moral Sentiments, he moved away from the notion that we are born with a moral sense and preferred the principle of there being a sympathy in all things. It is this sympathy that binds communities together. But there is little chance of such sympathy if what people need is provided through commercial structures that place an ever greater distance between the supplier and the consumer, because economies of scale can destroy the economics of localness. It has become, again, a purely mechanical process with no room for the complexity and multi-faceted dimensions of a proper local relationship between a community and the suppliers that serve it.

A balance between the market and society

Once again, there has to be a balance between the market on the one hand and society on the other, otherwise real problems occur. … This is why city-level policy to encourage healthy local food systems could scarcely be more important. It is a way to ensure a harmonious relationship between the city and its hinterland, fostering greater understanding and respect for the services that the rural environment and economy provide. It is also a means by which a circular economy can be generated where wastes become resources rather than pollution.

So, with that in mind, how could we better empower all sorts of communities to create a much more participative economic model that safeguards their identity, cohesion and diversity – one that makes a clear distinction between the maintenance of Nature's capital reserves and the income it produces? That is the challenge we face, it seems to me – to see nature's capital and her processes as the very basis of a new form of economics and to engage communities at the grass roots to put

Columnist recalls iconic general store

By Jerry Eltzroth

My truck odometer records four tenths of a mile from my grandparent's old house to where George Witt's general store once stood. My odometer must be wrong because when I was a kid it seemed more like a four mile hike on a hot August day in the 1950's to buy a cold Coke. George had a Coke machine that required a nickel, which gave you the right to navigate a small bottle of Coke down the slot and out the retaining gate. You popped the cap off on the opener on the side of the cooler. The taste of that cold Coke on a hot day will never be forgotten. If my Grandpa Dickerson was with me I might get a bologna/cheese sandwich or a candy bar as a bonus. The mesmerizing interior of this establishment is etched in the memory of every person that ever lived in Witt Springs.

Life in Witt Springs in the early decades of the 20th century revolved around the one room schools, the churches like Sand Hill Christian Church and George Witt's General Store. George's father, William Lincoln Witt, was the original proprietor. The store was a place where people in the community gathered to pick up their mail or newspaper, to receive messages, to wait for a ride and to secure the groceries and other provisions needed in their daily lives. George's establishment was an important community center where people gathered around the coal stove, especially in the winter. During those gatherings many a funny story was told, news was shared, wars were won, presidents were elected and cattle were bred. The neighborhood drunks would sober up on Saturday night and George would see that they got home safe.

The 'mom and pop' operation was more than just George and his wife Dovie. Their daughters, Lorraine and Janice helped. George's brother, Miller 'Zeckle' Witt, was the postmaster of the Witt Springs Post Office located within the store. Janice ('Jan') Witt spent much of her childhood helping her Daddy in the store and assisted her Uncle Zeckle in the post office. Jan explained to me how she "learned to count change, to slice lunch meat by hand, to weigh up brown sugar, salt, dried beans as well as onions and potatoes. All the staples were put in a brown paper bag and tied with a string. Daddy would charge by the pound but the customer always got an 'extra shake' from the scoop. I learned to pump gas—literally pump gas! You had to use a crank to pump gas up into a glass globe above the tank and then the gas was gravity fed into the vehicle's gas tank."

After electricity arrived in the community, the gravity pumps were replaced with the new gasoline pumps pictured in this article as well as other electrical powered conveniences. Jan mentioned that she learned to roller skate behind the counters while using them for support.

George Witt's store was a true general merchandise establishment. Staples in bulk such as coffee, tea, meal, flour, salt and sugar were always in stock. Canned foods, sliced deli meats/cheeses, candy, gum, soap products, dry goods, clothing items, common medicinal needs, and tobacco products were available. Fresh fruits and vegetables were available when in season. Livestock feed, fertilizer and garden products such as seed potatoes, onion sets and packaged seeds could be found. Petroleum products (gasoline, oil, kerosene) were in constant demand. A seemingly infinite variety of hardware such as nails, screws, nuts/bolts, baling wire, fish hooks, horseshoes, rope, needles, thread, brooms, mops, hand and garden tools, harness, etc. were stored on shelves, on the floor in kegs/barrels/boxes or hanging from the walls and ceiling. If George did not have it in stock, he would order what you desired. He could figure the quantity of roofing materials or fencing for a customer. A delivery service was provided to customers.

Once a week, George traveled to the livestock market. He hauled livestock to and from the market for people all over Sand Hill. On his trip back from Richmond each week he would bring fresh fruits, vegetables and grocery goods from Madison Wholesale Company. He traveled to the Lee County coal mines and hauled coal to sell to his local patrons. The livestock feed he sold was transported from Indiana.

The general store had the first telephone to be installed in the community. That was yet another magnet to draw people into the store. George allowed his patrons to make necessary calls as long as they were kept brief because the phone was primarily for business. The store's ring was 1 long and 1 short. My grandparent's had the second phone installed in Witt Springs. I can remember the old fashioned wooden box on the kitchen wall of my grandparent's house in the 1950's. I think my grandparent's ring was 3 longs and 3 shorts. Of course they were party lines so you had to keep in mind that a third party may be listening. As people in the community acquired telephones, they would call in their order and their groceries were delivered once a week. James Crouch, George's son-in-law, helped with the deliveries.

Barbara (Blackwell) Shoemaker remembers the store "was a special place with the glass candy case where you could select different kinds of candy that was put in a little brown paper bag. There were big rolls of bologna and blocks of cheese sliced according to what you wanted—number of slices or pounds. On our way home from school, the school bus stopped there long enough for us to get a cold bottle of Coke or an ice cream treat from the cold box. Something else that comes to mind are the old gas pumps with a glass container at the top showing the gasoline as it was pumped into the car. It was fascinating to me. There was a large scale on the end of the covered porch where bags of grain were weighed. We weighed ourselves too!"

George ran a credit business, but at times it was called trust—trusting that his patrons could pay later. Since cash was scarce in those days, payment was rendered by barter at times—eggs, chickens, livestock, vegetables, fruit or most anything of value. To Jan's delight they once received a piano to settle a debt. Family and young men, like Lewis Edward Muncie, in the community were given jobs around the store so they could make a little money.

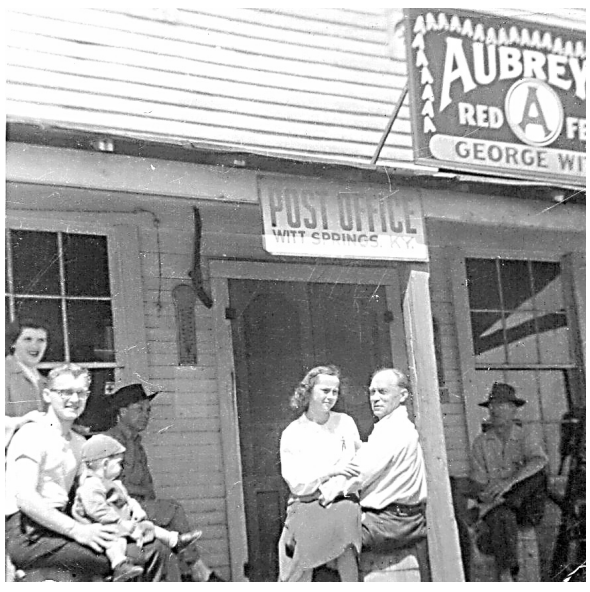

Jan had this to say about her father, "Daddy's life was the store. He worked 16 hours a day, or as he always said, 'until the last penny went down the road'. He had a special way of serving people. He taught me to never lie, always be honest, treat people good, the customer was always right, wear a smile and be respectful. No one will ever know all the good he did for others."

After George Witt could no longer operate the store because of health reasons, Myron Thomas had a hand at it for a few years. Lloyd and Maefrey Hall bought most of the Witt place in 1965. They continued operating the general store in the old wooden building for a few years until it became unsafe. The old store building was razed and a concrete block building was built on the same site. The feed shed attached to the rear of the old store was moved to the back of the barn which now is owned by the Arthur's. Some elements of the Witt Springs Post Office were salvaged and are stored at the Estill County Historical Society. Maefrey Hall continued the tradition of a 'general store/community gathering place' as Hall's Grocery. In 1986 the remains of the old Witt farm was sold at auction. The store was auctioned separately and remained in operation until about 2000, but it changed owners several times. The building now sits empty and looks forlorn. Times change and it's difficult to compete with the big merchandisers. What once was part of the glue that helped bind this community together is gone.

We now have Wal-Mart, Dollar General, gas/food marts, and Facebook. I miss the days of the wooden screen door slamming, the sound of creaking floor boards underfoot, the wondrous sights and aromas, plus the comradery of sitting eyeball-to-eyeball around a potbellied stove with friends and neighbors who are not engrossed with cell phones or other electronic devices. That slower-paced lifestyle started to vanish that hot August day in the 1950's when I ventured down Sand Hill Road in search of that cold Coke.

those processes first. If we can do that, then we have an approach that acts locally by thinking globally, just as nature does – all parts operating locally to establish the coherence of the whole.

Here in Louisville, for instance, I met with representatives of your major food and drink manufacturers, and also spent time with farmers and food producers at what, I would suggest, is a very significant idea – the creation of the Food Hub and the development of the area around that proposed site. Re-localizing your food systems and encouraging the many small and medium-sized farms that surround your city to consider how best to offer locally produced food would make a tremendous difference to the long term sustainability of your economy, especially if real attention was paid to the health of the soil. A long time ago it was President [Franklin] Roosevelt who gave a very prescient warning when he said - "a nation that destroys its soils destroys itself." So, of central importance will be how to reconcile our urban and rural development. The actions of leading cities like Louisville can provide a demonstration of what can be done that is of value not only to the United States, but also globally.

Likewise, as far as human health is concerned, I was alarmed to hear from your leading cardiologist here, Dr. Bhatnagar, just how directly the high rates of air pollution you struggle with are related to the high levels of cardiovascular disease. If you recognize that the quality of the air is not just an "environmental" issue, but a very serious economic issue, then you can see that the health of people directly affects the health of an economy. So perhaps, at the end of the day, it might be cheaper to join up the dots and put paid to the pollution, rather than pursue the more expensive option of encouraging people to take yet more pills to help their hearts?

So, having spent the day here in Louisville, I can only offer my warmest congratulations not only for what you have already achieved, but also what you are striving for in the future – a model of truly integrated and holistic thinking on a city scale and a beacon of inspiration for others to learn from – for instance, your work in helping build communities such as at the African American Heritage Centre, the boldness of the vision for the Food Hub project (why wouldn't we all want to shorten the links between consumer and producer?); the remarkable potential of a new discussion between the health insurance companies and your major food companies who, of course, would love to become more sustainable if only the financial climate allowed them.

Could this, then, be part of the solution to the problems we face? Could it be one that might give us hope, for we do still have within our societies and within our existing technologies the solutions that will enable us to transcend our current predicament. All we lack, perhaps, is the will to establish a more entire and connected perspective. There are many examples where communities have replaced the short-term impulse with the long-term plan. But part of that strategy – to my mind at least at the heart of it – is the need for a new public and private-sector partnership which includes NGO [non-governmental organizations] and community participation. It seems to me that for this to work we need to ensure that community and environmental capital is indeed put alongside the requirements of financial capital and that we also develop transparent means to measure the social and environmental impact of our actions.

We certainly need to refine our ability to measure what we do so that we become more aware of our responsibility. This validates the need for "accounting for sustainability," which has since become known elsewhere as true-cost accounting – a method by which businesses can take proper account of the cost to the Earth of their products and services, and which I initiated and developed 11 years ago. It is encouraging that this approach is being tested by a range of companies, government departments and agencies, and I hope that it can be adopted more generally so that well-being and sustainability can be measured, rather than merely growth in consumption.

We also need, dare I say it, new forms of international collaboration to value ecosystem services. For instance, the world must recognize the absolutely vital utility that the rainforests provide by generating a real income for rainforest countries – where, incidentally, some 1.4 billion of the poorest people on Earth rely in some way on the rainforests for their livelihoods – an income which can be used to finance an integrated, low-carbon development model. Paradoxically, the answer to deforestation lies not solely or even mainly in the forestry sector, but rather in the agricultural and energy sectors.

It is also increasingly possible to enhance efficiency and economic rates of return by linking different sectors together in what are called "virtuous circles." You can see this in the relationship between the waste, energy and water sectors where the waste product of one process becomes the raw material of another, thereby mimicking nature's cyclical process of waste-free recycling.

Alternatives need to become mainstream

The trouble is, at the moment, so many of these brilliant ideas sit on the fringes of our economy. They are seen as "alternatives" when they need to become mainstream. But for this to happen and for such alternatives to be effective, it will require a system of long-term consistent and coherent financial incentives and disincentives; otherwise, how else will we achieve the urgent response we need to rectify the situation we face?

Another example of an alternative that needs to become mainstream, and which would enhance both community and environmental capital, lies in the way we plan, design and build our settlements. I have talked long and hard about this for what seems rather a long time – and look what it's done to me! – but it is yet another case where a rediscovery of so-called "old fashioned," traditional virtues can lead to the development of sustainable urbanism. This approach emphasizes the integration of mixed-use buildings and the use of local materials to create local identity which, when combined with cutting-edge developments in building technology, can enhance a sense of place and real community.

Our need for these solutions is going to grow exponentially as our global population rises and our ecological and economic crises deepen. Is this not a rationale for investing massively in these new and more integrated approaches which, thereby, could help to create the kind of "virtuous circles" based on environmental and community capital that I have mentioned this evening? Such investment would also, I can't help thinking, have the added benefit of creating many new jobs.

But are we prepared to take such a step? As Mahatma Gandhi pointed out, "The difference between what we do and what we are capable of doing would suffice to solve most of the world's problems." The starting point is to see things differently from the current, dominant world view which in so many ways is no longer relevant to the situation in which we find ourselves. The worst course would be to continue with "business as usual" as this will only compound the problem. We must see that we are part of the natural order rather than isolated from it; to see that nature operates according to an organic "grammar" of harmony and which is infused with an awareness of its own being, making it anchored by consciousness. It is an interconnected, interdependent function of creation with harmony existing between all things.

We are, ladies and gentlemen, at an historic moment – because we face a future where there is a real prospect that if we fail the Earth, we fail humanity. And I don't know about all of you but, as a grandfather, I have no intention of failing my, or anyone else's, grandchildren.

An Encouraging Word: Another day is ahead

By Howard Coop

Palm Sunday, one of the more significant observances of worldwide Christendom, is ahead. This special day commemorates what Christian tradition has named the Triumphal Entry of Jesus into Jerusalem at the beginning of the week before the Feast of Unleavened Bread.

When Jesus, on his way to Jerusalem, came near to Bethany and Bethphage on the Munt of Olives, he sent two of his disciples to the village ahead with instruction, "You will find a donkey tied there, with her colt by her. Untie them and bring them to me." When the disciples returned, Jesus mounted that donkey and proceeded over the western slope of the Mount of Olives along the ancient road to Jerusalem.

The awaiting crowd did not overlook the significance of what they saw. They recognized two things: An old messianic prophecy said, "Say to the Daughter of Zion, 'See, your king comes to you, gentle and riding on a donkey, on a colt, the foal of a donkey,' " and they knew that a king riding a donkey came on a mission of peace.

Recognizing that, the crowd went wild with excitement. Some tore fronds from nearby palm trees, a well-known sign for hailing a conqueror. Others spread their outer garments on the old road. All shouted, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest!" Their hopes, they thought, were fulfilled, and their struggles for a better life were over.

But the Triumphal Entry was on the wrong side of victory. Before the week was over, another mob was shouting, "Away with this man!" and "Crucify him! Crucify him!" And Pilate, the Roman Procurator of Judea, turned Jesus over to be crucified and attempted to wash his hands of any wrong.

Palm Sunday says one powerful thing: Things don't always work out, dreams don't always come true, and hopes are sometimes shattered. But we don't give up. We don't quit. Another day is ahead, and something good is beyond the moment.

March is Colon Cancer Awareness month

March is Colon Cancer Awareness month. Almost 2,100 Kentuckians are expected to be diagnosed with colorectal cancer this year and 850 deaths are estimated in the state for 2015, according to the American Cancer Society.

Colorectal cancer is the nation's third-leading cause of cancer-related death for both men and women; however it is one of the few forms of cancer that is highly preventable, detectable and treatable.

Through proper colorectal cancer screening, doctors can find and remove hidden growths (called "polyps") in the colon, before they become cancerous. Removing polyps can prevent cancer altogether.

Nearly 200 organizations have committed to eliminating colorectal cancer as a major public health problem. They are working toward the shared goal of 80 percent of adults aged 50 and older being regularly screened for colorectal cancer by 2018. Last year in the U.S., 137,000 cases of colorectal cancer were diagnosed.

"We have found that many people aren't getting tested because they don't believe they are at risk, don't understand that there are testing options or don't think they can afford it," said Greg Broy, spokesperson for the American Cancer Society in Kentucky.

"The truth is that the vast majority of cases of colorectal cancer occur in people age 50 and older. Colorectal cancer in its early stages usually has no symptoms, so everyone 50 and older should get tested," said Broy.

"We are asking all Kentuckians to come together and help us by getting screened and talking to your friends and family who are over 50 years of age about getting screened. Together, we can help to eliminate colorectal cancer as a major public health problem," said Broy.

ALPACABERRY FARM, INC.;
PAMELA S. HEDGE, and DAVID R. SEVERSON, DEFENDANTS

*** *** ***

By virtue of Final Judgment and Order of Sale by the Estill Circuit Court in the above cause, I will, on Friday, April 3, 2015, at the hour of 9:30 a.m., at the Courthouse door in Irvine, Estill County, Kentucky, offer the respective interests of the above parties in the following described property for sale at public auction, to-wit:

Property address: 60 Thornburg Bend Road, Irvine, Kentucky

Beginning at the margin of Thornburg Bend with Otis Freeman; thence in an easterly direction a distance of approximately 395 feet to the Tobe Brandenburg line; thence with said Brandenburg line a southerly direction a distance of approximately 225 feet to the Hubert Estes line; thence with said Estes line a westerly direction a distance of approximately 162 feet to a point, a corner; thence continuing with the Estes line a southerly direction a distance of approximately 164 feet to the margin of the Palmer Road; thence with the margin of said road a westerly direction a distance of approximately 105 feet to the margin of Thornburg Road; thence with said Thornburg Road a northerly direction a distance of approximately 477 feet to the point of beginning and containing 2.89 acres, more or less.

Being the same property conveyed to Alpacaberry Farm Inc., a Kentucky corporation, by Deed of Conveyance from Richard D. Johnson and Lisa R. Johnson, husband and wife, dated October 29, 2010, of record in Deed Book 284 at Page 147, Estill County Clerk's Office.

Subject to any and all applicable restrictive covenants, existing easements, utility easements, right-of-ways, provisions of applicable zoning statutes and ordinances, and rules and regulations of the Department of Health, if any, and regulations that might apply through planning & zoning.

The above described property shall be sold upon the following terms and conditions:

1. The purchaser shall take the sale real estate free and clear of the claims of the parties to this action, but it shall be sold subject to the following:
 a. current year (2015) ad valorem real estate taxes affecting the real estate for which the purchaser shall take no credit on the purchase price;
 b. easements, restrictions, and stipulations of record;
 c. any current assessments for public improvements levied against the property; and
 d. any matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey or inspection of the property.
2. The sale shall be made to the highest and best bidder or bidders. The successful bidder shall pay cash or make a deposit of ten percent (10%) of the purchase price, with the balance on credit for thirty (30) days. Any purchaser, other than the Plaintiff or any other party who has a judgment in that party's favor, who does not pay cash in full, shall be required to execute a bond, with surety thereon acceptable to the Master Commissioner to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and sale bond shall bear interest at the rate of 12% per annum from the date of sale until paid and shall have the same force and effect as a judgment and shall remain and be a lien on the property until paid. The purchasers shall have the privilege of paying all of the balance of the purchase price prior to the expiration of the thirty (30) day period.
3. The successful bidder at sale, at bidder's own expense, may carry fire and extended insurance coverage on the improvements from the date of sale until the purchase price is fully paid, in an amount at least sufficient to cover a loss to the extent of the court appraised value of the improvements on the real estate or the unpaid balance of the purchase price is fully paid, in whichever amount is less, with the loss payable clause to the Master Commissioner. Failure of the purchaser to effect such insurance coverage shall not affect the validity of the sale or the purchaser's liability thereunder, but shall entitle, but not require, any party adjudicated an interest in the real estate, after giving notice to the Master Commissioner, to effect said insurance and furnish evidence of the policy to the Master Commissioner. The premium of the insurance policy shall then be charged to the purchaser as purchaser's cost.
4. In the event the Plaintiff becomes the purchaser of the real estate at the Master Commissioner's sale, and if the Plaintiff's bid is less than its lien adjudged herein, Plaintiff may comply with the terms of sale by taking credit upon this Judgment without making the cash deposit or executing the sale bond as provided for in this Judgment.

By virtue of Judgment and Order of Sale by the Estill Circuit Court in the above cause, I will, on Friday, April 3, 2015, at the hour of 9:30 a.m., at the Courthouse door in Irvine, Estill County, Kentucky, offer the respective interests of the above parties in the following described property for sale at public auction, to-wit:

Property address: 368 Garret Avenue, Irvine, Kentucky 40336

A certain tract or parcel of land lying in Estill County, Kentucky, more particularly bounded and described as follows (based upon a September 27, 2004 survey performed by J. Scott Hogue P.L.S. #3698);

Being all of the property (.338) acres more or less, designated as Lot #1, on the plat entitled "Rader and Rogers Property, Garrett Avenue, West Irvine, Kentucky", said plat being recorded in Plat Cabinet 2, Slide 206, in the office of the Estill County Court Clerk.

Being the same property conveyed to Imogene Brandenburg, an unremarried widow who acquired title by virtue of a deed from Doug Woolery and Teresa Woolery, husband and wife, dated July 14, 2005, recorded July 15, 2005, at Deed Book 259, Page 790, Estill County, Kentucky records.

Subject to all restrictions, conditions and covenants and to all legal highways and easements.

Subject to any and all applicable restrictive covenants, existing easements, utility easements, right-of-ways, provisions of applicable zoning statutes and ordinances, and rules and regulations of the Department of Health, if any, and regulations that might apply through planning & zoning.

The above described property shall be sold upon the following terms and conditions:

1. The purchaser shall take the sale real estate free and clear of the claims of the parties to this action, but it shall be sold subject to the following:
 a. current year (2015) ad valorem real estate taxes affecting the real estate for which the purchaser shall take no credit on the purchase price;
 b. easements, restrictions, and stipulations of record;
 c. any current assessments for public improvements levied against the property; and
 d. any matters which would be disclosed by an accurate survey or inspection of the property.
2. The sale shall be made to the highest and best bidder or bidders. The successful bidder shall pay cash or make a deposit of ten percent (10%) of the purchase price, with the balance on credit for sixty (60) days. Any purchaser, other than the Plaintiff, who does not pay cash in full, shall be required to execute a bond, with surety thereon acceptable to the Master Commissioner to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and sale bond shall bear interest at the rate of 12% per annum from the date of sale until paid and shall have the same force and effect as a judgment and shall remain and be a lien on the property until paid. The purchasers shall have the privilege of paying all of the balance of the purchase price prior to the expiration of the sixty (60) day period.
3. The successful bidder at sale, at bidder's own expense, may carry fire and extended insurance coverage on the improvements from the date of sale until the purchase price is fully paid, in an amount at least sufficient to cover a loss to the extent of the court appraised value of the improvements on the real estate or the unpaid balance of the purchase price is fully paid, in whichever amount is less, with the loss payable clause to the Master Commissioner. Failure of the purchaser to effect such insurance coverage shall not affect the validity of the sale or the purchaser's liability thereunder, but shall entitle, but not require, any party adjudicated an interest in the real estate, after giving notice to the Master Commissioner, to effect said insurance and furnish evidence of the policy to the Master Commissioner. The premium of the insurance policy shall then be charged to the purchaser as purchaser's cost.
4. In the event the Plaintiff becomes the purchaser of the real estate at the Master Commissioner's sale, and if the Plaintiff's bid is less than its lien adjudged herein, Plaintiff may comply with the terms of sale by taking credit upon this Judgment without making the cash deposit or executing the sale bond as provided for in this Judgment.

Study finds common equine parasite misidentified in textbooks

from Eric Baker County Agent for Agriculture and Natural Resources

A recent study led by Martin Nielsen, assistant professor at the University of Kentucky Gluck Equine Research Center, found that all veterinary medicine textbooks have misidentified a common equine parasite.

The large equine roundworm Parascaris equorum, commonly referred to as the ascarid, which is known for infecting foals, is actually a different species—Parascaris univalens.

The research suggests P. univalens is the main species now observed in equines. The broader designation Parascaris spp. should be used instead unless cytological characterization (a technique for characterizing chromosomes) has confirmed the species.

"Parascaris univalens is really the forgotten parasite," Nielsen said. "It is almost never mentioned in the textbooks, and most people have only heard about one roundworm species infecting equids."

P. univalens was discovered more than 130 years ago. The species only possesses one germ line chromosome pair as opposed to two for P. equorum, but the two species are otherwise considered structurally identical.

"We really wanted to find specimens of both species to study and find differences in their DNA," Nielsen said. "The only way to tell them apart is to look at their chromosomes, so we invited a leading expert, Dr. Clara Goday, to the Gluck Equine Research Center to teach us the delicate technique of parasite karyoptyping."

Karyotyping is a technique to study and characterize chromosomes in a sample of cells.

For the study, 30 live worms were obtained and dissected. All of the samples were identified as P. univalens. Then, the karyotyping technique was performed on ascarid eggs from foal fecal samples. P. equorum was not identified among these, whereas P. univalens was found in 17 samples, with the remaining eight being inconclusive.

"We were part of another study analyzing numerous Parascaris specimens from several different continents, and the conclusion there was that only one species was found," Nielsen said. "We compared genetic information obtained for P. univalens in our study with gene codes already published as P. equorum and found that they were probably mislabeled."

Others from the UK Gluck Center involved in the study were Jennifer Bellaw, a doctoral student in veterinary science; Eugene Lyons, professor; and Teri Lear, associate professor. The group from the UK Gluck Center collaborated with Jianbin Wang, assistant professor, and Richard Davis, professor, University of Colorado School of Medicine; and Clara Goday at Centro de Investigaciones Biologicas in Spain. The article was published in the December issue of Parasitology Research.

The mission of the Gluck Center, a UK Ag Equine program in the College of Agriculture, Food and Environment, is scientific discovery, education and dissemination of knowledge for the benefit of the health and well being of horses. The Gluck Center faculty conducts equine research in six targeted areas: genetics and genomics, infectious diseases and immunology, musculoskeletal science, parasitology, pharmacology/toxicology and reproductive health.

Educational programs of Kentucky Cooperative Extension serve all people regardless of race, color, age, sex, religion, disability, or national origin.

Horse owners are invited to attend an informative seminar on Monday, March 30th, 6:00 p.m. at the Estill County Extension office. Seminar topics include "feeding the horse" and "equine vaccines/health". Guest speakers include UK equine specialist Bob Coleman and Linda Grimes, DVM.

A meal will be served. Please pre-register so we can have enough food. For details or to pre-register, call 723-4557.

Kentucky Afield Outdoors: March brings Muskie Madness

This is the third installment of the "Spring Fishing Fever" series of fishing articles. Produced by the Kentucky Afield Outdoors staff, the series details productive fishing opportunities across Kentucky.

FRANKFORT, Ky. – The NCAA Division I men's basketball tournament captivates the state of Kentucky every March and this year all eyes are on John Calipari and the University of Kentucky.

Can the top-seeded Wildcats bring a ninth national title back to Lexington by becoming the first team since 1976 to finish the season undefeated? University of Louisville fans may hope not.

For some anglers, March also means Muskie Madness, an obsession among fanatics who tolerate the winter months waiting for their version of the Big Dance.

Kentucky's muskellunge lakes have iced out and people are primed for the spring bite while some northern lakes may still be iced over or the muskie seasons there haven't opened.

"Among anglers, we've developed a reputation as an early-season or spring break destination," said Gregg Thomas, who owns Battle the Beast Guide Service and guides clients on Cave Run Lake and elsewhere. "It's a good fishery and a place that people want to come to."

Kentucky is within the natural range of the Ohio strain of muskie. Dams built on some of the state's native muskie streams in eastern and southern Kentucky last century formed Buckhorn, Cave Run and Green River Lakes.

A study of native muskie populations in eastern Kentucky streams conducted in the mid-1960s and early 1970s found muskies began their pre-spawn movements in streams near the end of March and they spawned in late April to early May when water temperatures averaged 55 to 60 degrees.

Reservoir-dwelling muskies follow the same instincts.

"Those fish will be going through their pre-spawning and spawning movements," said Mike Hardin, assistant director of fisheries for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources. "You can find them up tributaries and streams. As soon the water warms up, you may find them on mud flats near stream channels."

At Green River Lake, the area around Green River Marina is popular among boat and bank anglers alike from mid-February through mid-April.

"It doesn't catch a lot of wind, so it warms up pretty quick and it's fairly shallow, especially the back part of that cove," said Eric Cummins, southwestern fisheries district biologist. "The muskies pile in there. It's an excellent spot where you can easily fish from the bank and have a good chance to hook into one."

Cave Run Lake, which produced the standing state record muskie in November 2008, features a similarly productive spot for bank anglers.

Stoney Cove Recreation Area sits at a corner on the lake-side face of the dam. As a bonus, Stoney Cove offers close proximity to the tailwater area on the other side of Ky. 826.

"That can be a great fishery," in the spring, Thomas said of the tailwater below Cave Run Lake dam.

The same holds true for the Tailwater Recreation Areas below Green River Lake and Buckhorn Lake. Outflow information for Buckhorn, Cave Run and Green River Lakes may be found by accessing the "Water Information" section on the Louisville District of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineer's website at www.lrl.usace.army.mil. For muskie fishing, a favorable discharge rate is 1,500 to 2,000 cubic feet per second.

In years when the water is not already elevated by late winter, Hardin has experienced fantastic muskie fishing on Cave Run Lake when the water is on the rise and the trees are just leafing out.

Erratic weather and high water come with the territory in spring and add to the challenge of catching muskies.

This year, snow melt and recent heavy rains have many lakes somewhere between summer pool and flood stage. Whether fishing by boat or on the bank, these conditions can be overcome.

"Spring provides some of the best opportunities to catch a fat fish," Hardin said.

A novice muskie angler can get started with 7-foot heavy action baitcasting rod matched with a heavy duty baitcasting reel. Braided line in the 50- to 100-pound test class with a 9- to 18-inch wire leader offers a sense of security when a muskie strikes and thrashes on the end of the line.

Rattling-style lipless crankbaits, minnow baits, jerkbaits, spinnerbaits and in-line spinners are all good offerings to have on hand in the spring. Live bait also is an option, but quick-strike rigging is recommended as a way to help reduce mortality rates for catch-and-release muskies.

Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Resources stocks Buckhorn, Green River and Cave Run Lakes annually with 13-inch fingerlings reared at the Minor E. Clark Fish Hatchery near Morehead for the purpose of maintaining trophy fisheries. Dewey Lake also was stocked with muskie last year because of hatchery surplus but those fish aren't expected to reach 36 inches until 2019.

A 36-inch minimum size limit for muskies is in place for Buckhorn, Cave Run and Green River Lakes. Earlier this month, the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Commission proposed a 36-inch size limit for Dewey Lake that would go into effect in March 2016 pending legislative approval. There is a 30-inch size limit on muskie elsewhere in the state.

Anglers are reminded to purchase their 2015-16 fishing licenses as the new license year started March 1. Consult the Kentucky Fishing and Boating Guide for complete licensing information. It's available online at fw.ky.gov and wherever licenses are sold.

Dave Dreves, fisheries research biologist for the Kentucky Department of Fish and Wildlife Resources, holds a nearly 21-pound muskellunge captured in January 2014 from Buckhorn Lake. March is one of the best months to catch the elusive muskellunge, one of the toughest fish for anglers to fool into striking a lure.

Marching band hosts spaghetti supper

On Saturday night, the Estill County Marching band's booster club hosted a spaghetti supper at Estill Springs Elementary to raise money for the band.
The money will be used to help pay for instruments, band camp, props, hotel rooms and food for the band members.
The meal consisted of a salad with vinaigrette dressing, spaghetti and meat balls, bread sticks, and for dessert, banana pudding or pie. The supplies for the meal were donated from All Things Country, Priceless, Pizza Hut, Hargett Dollar General, Little Caesar, Michaels, Ruth Harrison, Wallingford Broadcasting, WSK, and the families of band members.
The band boosters raised about $800 with the spaghetti supper.

Robotics team prepares to compete at state

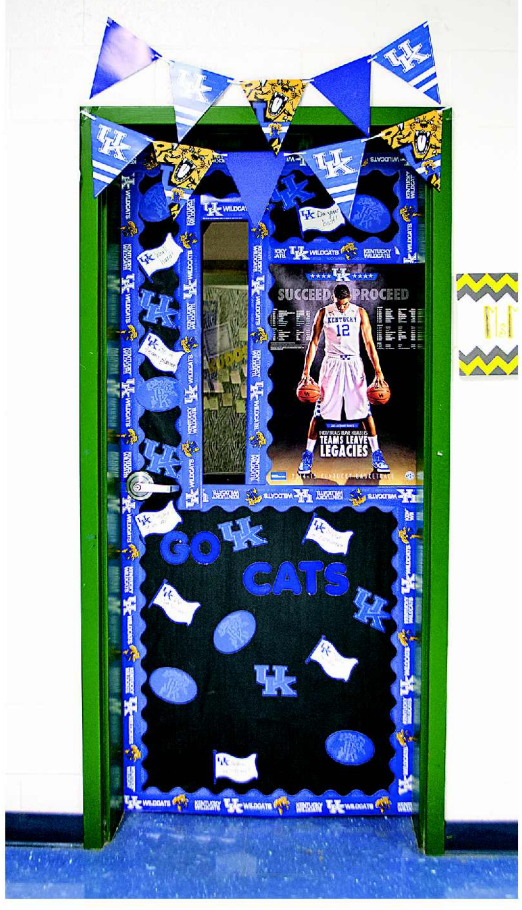

Photos by Marla Marrs

The Middle School Robotics team will be competing in a state competition on Thursday at Rupp Arena. The team is coached by Brian McKinney, who teaches technology classes at the middle school. On April 18, at 9 a.m., the robotics team will be hosting a competition at West Irvine Elementary. That competition will be sponsored by 4-H.
Students' robots are made from Legos and tiny computers. The students program everything on the tiny computers.
The school was recently able to purchase 12 robots through a $5,000 Gear-Up grant.

Operation Preparation preps doors with college info, basketball team colors and logos

In observance of Operation Preparation, classes at the Estill County Middle School decorated classroom doors with the top 25 teams in the NCAA tournament. As teams are beaten out of the tournament the door decorations come down. The class with the last door decoration standing wins a prize. Naturally, many students are hoping UK will remain standing after Duke and North Carolina doors are undecorated.
Not only were they required to include information about basketball teams, but students researched the academic programs at various colleges. Operation Preparation is a state-wide iniative to prepare eighth and tenth graders for college. Photos by Marla Marrs
